Local Networking is key to business success

There is a grave danger for small businesses in becoming isolated in their own world. By detaching themselves from other business owners they risk becoming insular and restricted in how they view their own products and services. I always advise my clients to get engaged with other local companies to exchange ideas and get a feeling for how healthy the market is in their town.

OK. So it takes time and it is possible you will meet a proportion of people you might not choose as friends. However, people like estate agents, lawyers and shop owners have a pretty good idea of the state of the local economy - and that could have a significant impact on how you invest in and market your own products and services.

2011 Diary Date

The Chamber will be holding the

This local networking doesn't have to be a formal networking group. In Chesham, we have a number of groups that hold formal and informal get-togethers for local business people. Chesham Luncheon Club holds, surprise surprise..., a lunch once a month where we hear a 10 minute presentation from a local company followed by a buffet style networking lunch. It is well attended by a wide variety of business owners, normally about 60 each month. It provides a friendly environment where you can make new contacts, discuss ideas and forge new alliances.

The Chesham Chamber of Trade & Commerce hold regular networking event in the form of Business Breakfasts, social events and workshops. Here you are likely to meet some of the real influencers in the town. They include business people and representatives from local and district councils. The chamber is a place where business gets done and discussion happens about how business in Chesham is marketed.

Naturally all of these events depend on the quality of people that support them. In Chesham we are lucky to have an active and diverse business community but it could be even better with your participation. Why not get involved - you could be pleasantly surprised by the positive impact it could have on your business.
